CARBON MONOXIDE

Carbon monoxide is an odorless, colorless and potentially dangerous gas produced when fuel is burned without enough air for complete combustion. The flame in gas appliances should be blue, possibly with flecks of orange. If the flame is mostly yellow that indicates that the gas is not burning properly and is giving off carbon monoxide. In large amounts, carbon monoxide can cause headaches, brain damage, loss of consciousness, and death.

Steps You Can Take to Prevent Carbon Monoxide:

- Have your appliance(s) checked annually by a certified heating contractor.
- Make sure your chimney is cleaned periodically and free of obstructions.
- Keep air vents for your gas appliances clear.
- Never use a gas oven or stove top for heating your home.
- Do not use portable charcoal or propane grills indoors.
- Do not run an automobile or gas engine in an enclosed space.
- Use only space heaters that are approved by local fire codes and properly installed.
- Check fireplaces for closed or blocked flues.
- Periodically check range pilots for carbon build up.
